

Project Narrative

Recent studies in humans have discovered that blocking the ability of glucose, the main energy molecule for cells, to enter the brain can trigger seizures associated with a type of childhood epilepsy. The goal of our work is to determine how this occurs. Understanding how low levels of glucose in the brain trigger seizures will pave the way forward in developing better treatments.